UW Wi-Fi Network Changes Begin December 22

Starting December 22, 2026, new devices will no longer be able to connect to the UW Wi-Fi network named "University of Washington." This is part of UW's transition away from that network, which is scheduled to be fully retired in June 2027.

Devices that have already connected to the "University of Washington" network before December 22 can continue using it for now, but UW-IT recommends moving to one of the supported, encrypted wireless networks instead:

- eduroam – the preferred option for most devices; a UW NetID is required.
- UW MPSK – for devices that cannot use eduroam and need to be registered manually; a UW NetID is required.
- Husky Guest – for visitors, guests, and devices that only need web browsing; no UW NetID is required.

If you are setting up a new laptop, phone, tablet, or other device after December 22, be sure to use one of these supported networks rather than "University of Washington."
For additional instructions and troubleshooting, visit Using Wi-Fi at the UW or contact UW-IT.
